Effective Writing up of a qualitative PhD

ORADOR

David Silverman

Goldsmiths College, London

“Writing up” should never be something left to the end of your research. Instead, writing should be a continuous process, with you learning as you go from your supervisor, your peers and your own mistakes. I examine how this writing up can be accomplished efficiently if rarely painlessly.

- Practical suggestions about when to write a literature review and what it should contain.
- How to avoid dull methodology chapters. Keeping a research diary.
- How to write data chapters. What to include and what to omit.
- Concluding chapters that are not summaries but which stretch the imagination.
